The deceased has left a number of daughters besides the widows and it is a question whether they should also not get their shares if the distribution has to be according to the mohomedan law. There is no information in the file to show what the mode of devolution of this pension is. It will be seen from the reference files that there were a few female claimants to this pension, but unfortunately no information is available as to how their claims were decided. (pl 22 of Section I is missing) The pension being hereditary, it may be presumed that the division ought to be according to the mohomedan law.
